Oral and oropharyngeal cancer is the sixth most common cancer among white males and the fourth most common among black males. Oral and oropharyngeal cancer include cancer of the lip, tongue, floor of the mouth, palate, gingiva and alveolar mucosa, buccal mucosa, and oropharynx. Males have traditionally had higher incidence rates than females in New Jersey and throughout the US, although in recent years, the gap has narrowed due at least in part, to the increasing number of women who began smoking over the past three decades.
